

Triangle Trade

- Triangle Trade is a concept that demonstrates the economic relationship between three areas: the American and Caribbean colonies, the home countries in Europe, and the west African coast.
- The first leg was from Europe, which sent textiles, trinkets, guns, and ammunition to Africa; the “middle passage” was slaves to the Americans from Africa; in the third leg of the triangle, the Americas sent sugar, cotton, tobacco, rum, and molasses to Europe.

